A Fluid Process — Sponsored by Fort Collins Utilities

Front—larger water cycle in Colorado and our place within it—from snowmelt being channeled to Horsetooth reservoir to being processed in water treatment for use and put back in the Cache la Poudre River.

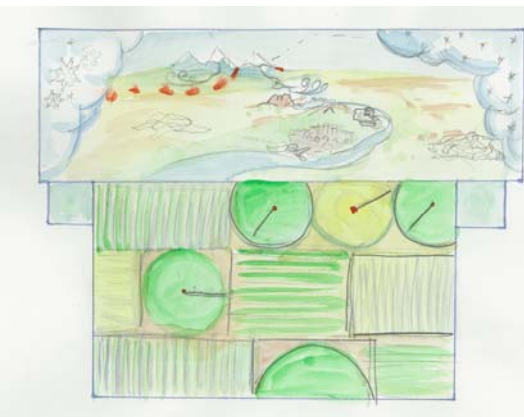

Back—everything is connected (tying back to how our use affects nature and is reintroduced to nature after our use) by showing a healthy riparian ecosystem with botanical and biological diversity.

East side—high desert backdrop with a bio swale and natural elements as storm water catchment design.

West side—the complexity of the water treatment process visually, from source to tap, retreatment and transit back to the river.
