Voters in Fort Collins and across Colorado have important decisions to make this November about their local representation and the future of taxation in the state.

Colorado's county clerks will begin releasing ballots on Oct. 16 for the Nov. 7 all-mail election. Prior to and during the release of ballots, the Coloradoan will publish multiple race profiles, previews and candidate questionnaires, with an emphasis on elections in Fort Collins, Poudre School District and statewide Proposition HH.

Bookmark this page and return frequently for updated information that you can use to help make informed decisions this November.

Boebert is the only Colorado congressional incumbent who is so far facing what appear to be well-funded primary challengers.

In the 1st Congressional District, Democratic U.S. Rep. Diana DeGette raised $104,000, spent $84,000 and had just over $331,000 on hand. Her only declared challenger is independent Morgan Law, who raised a few hundred dollars on top of a roughly $9,000 candidate loan.

Democratic U.S. Rep. Joe Neguse, who represents the 2nd Congressional District, raised $287,000, spent nearly $228,000 and finished the quarter with nearly $1.9 million in the bank. Republican Marshall Dawson, who lost a bid challenging Neguse last year, has filed quarterly reports this year but hasn't raised any money.
